Tradition, historical probabilities, physical and mental attributes of individuals as well as interior evidence all point to England as the home for centuries of all these families, and back of that the shores of the Baltic and North seas. Where given-names, names of places, and dates are marked doubtful it is hoped that others may be able to correctly ascertain and record them later.

Notes

DATES—Years of births. In the Carle line, 1600 and 1636 are estimates.

~~Connects~~ Connects husband and wife.

CARLE—Given-name of first American ancestor unknown: assumed to have been born in England, emigrated to Boston in 1630 or later. To reconcile reports of Maine genealogists as to different given-names of wives and separate personal incidents it is here necessary to assume that there were two Richard Carles.

ANCESTRY—In general the head name in each column is the first American ancestor of each branch, born in Europe. See detailed records following.

Name, History and Tradition

THE CARLE NAME AND ANCESTRY

England

The surname "CARLE" (CARLL or CARL) is of Anglo-Saxon Scandinavian origin and signified a man or male person. As a family name it is doubtless derived from the Anglo-Saxon class name, "ceorl" (churl), later "carl", meaning "fellow". A carle in Old England was a Saxon freeman holding an allotment of land, having the privilege of the Weregild; and eligible, when prospering, to become a franklin. Compare the Norse "Karli", Danish "Carli", modern Swedish "Carle" and "Carlia", Dutch "Carlee" and "Carley". Not related, however, to "Charles, Carl, Karl, Carlo, Carlos, etc." of other nations. Compare A.-S. "ceorl" (carl) and "eorl" (earl). The Saxons were attached to the soil, avoiding the towns. There were three classes: noble (eorl, earl), freeman or franklin (ceorl, carle), and slave (esne, serf). The Carles in America were farmers down to the IXth generation.

CARLE is in the list of "Names of persons entered in Domesday book as holding lands under King Edward the Confessor, A. D. 1041". Also with the same spelling is in the list of "Tenants in Chief in Domesday book of William the Conqueror, A. D. 1066". (See Barber's book containing "British Family Names", Pp. 41 and 53).

The CARLE connection in Old England must extend back to the earliest invasions, A. D. 459 to 750, on the North sea coast of Scotland and England, by the Danes, Norse, and Swedes of Scandinavia, and by the Friesians, Angles, Saxons, and Jutes who formerly inhabited the south shores of the Baltic and North seas. The origins and previous migrations of these branches of the Teutonic race are described in history and need not be traced here. The present compiler while in Stockholm in 1928, noticed the name of a William Carle in the city directory. Stefan Stefansson of Reykjavik, Iceland, a scholar whom he met on this tour, informs him that records show Carles in Norway in A. D. 850 and in Iceland A. D. 900, the latter probably coming with the English migration (A. D. 871) noted in history or with one of the migrations from Norway, or both. Members of the family making future visits to England may discover records that will link the Carles of the Domesday book with earlier as well as later Carles in England before the emigration of the first American ancestor about 1630.

In a genealogical work published in Maine the chapter on the "Carle and Carll Family" has this introduction:

"This surname was of Scandinavian origin and signified a man or male person. In Anglo-Saxon the name Carl-man represented a countryman, a rude rustic. In English we have carl-hemp, meaning male hemp or the largest stalks of that plant. This is quite distinct from the obsolete word "carl", a churl or clown. As a Christian name. in the forms Karl and Karle, it is common in Germany and Scandinavia at the present day. The name was evidently introduced into Scotland during the early incursions of the Norsemen, and is first found where the Norwegian and Danish settlements were established. The prevailing tradition of the Maine families ascribes to their ancestors an Irish origin, and there are some physical characteristics to support this theory."

America

The given name of the first CARLE (Carll) colonist in America is not yet ascertained; nor his former home in England, altho Dartmouth and Kingsweare might be investigated; nor the exact date and place where he and others landed at Boston or on the north coast of Massachusetts. It is a fair conjecture that he came in the year 1630 when no fewer than 17 ships and nearly one thousand English immigrants landed. Ferdinando Gorgas in his enmity to the Puritan church oppression in the Massachusetts Bay colony, in 1639 led many of the colonists at or near Boston northward into the present states of New Hampshire and Maine. Persecutions under Charles I and Archbishop Laud drove 25,0000 people from England to the Massachusetts colony during the decade of 1630-1640. There were settlements in (now) Maine at Kittery and in the Kennebec colony of Gorgas (which failed in 1607), but the compiler has been unable to learn of a Carle in the earliest records. That a Richard Carle sold "Carle's Point" at Kittery in 1666 is a matter of record (see below), and that a Carle was selectman of Falmouth (Portland) about 1672 is good tradition in the family. The family moved slowly up the coast into New Hampshire and Maine, and descendants are living along the coast as far north as a few miles back of Camden. This northerly drift and the apparent lack of strong church affiliations in the family seem to confirm the theory of its migration from Massachusetts under the lead of Ferdinando Gorgas.

There are no records of the settlements of Carle, Carll, south of Kittery, Maine. Church and court records prove the very early residence of the family along the lower coast of Maine thru Kennebunkport to Falmouth, the old name of Portland. Members of the family resided at Kittery, Dover, N. H., Biddeford, Saco, Sanford, Alfred, Scarborough, etc. My great-grandfather, Joseph, who changed his name from Carll back to Carle, removed from Sanford to near Camden. Court records at Alfred Maine, date from 1625. There are many Carll residents at Alfred and elsewhere. There does not appear to have been any emigration to the west or south, with the single exception of my father and his younger brother and an uncle of theirs, who settled at St. Clairsville, Ohio. I cannot find among the present population of Maine any old stock except English. It is recorded that Stephen, son of my great-grandfather, Joseph, died in Ohio. My father, Jonas, came to Ohio in 1861, residing with the George Corthell family, farmers five miles northeast of Tiffin. George Corthell was from the Carle neighborhood in Maine, and his sister, Lucinda, was married to father's brother, Otis. In 1871, George, a younger brother of my father, came to Ohio after father's death, and resided about two years in or near our neighborhood. He died at St. Louis, 1873, unmarried. At this writing I know of but six living male descendants of James Carle bearing the name of Carle: four descendants of Amos, two of Jonas.

At this time the compiler knows of but few living male descendants bearing the name Carle, including himself, of his grandfather, James Carle. There are a few of the name, Carl, Carle, thruout the country, but they are almost invariably variants of the German "Carl" or "Karl". The Car'es moved northward, only two or three individuals going westward. There are several Carlls at Alfred, Maine, that are kinspeople, being branches of ancestors of Joseph, James, etc.

All intermarriages down to and including my own have been with pure English stock. My mother's family, the EGBERT-WILLIAM lines, the SMITH and others are of unmixed English lineage. My wife's family, the HALE or HALES, is of like lineage, except a slight strain from the French in her Eastlick ancestor. See genealogical connections on this record with Egbert, Williams, Hale, Smith.

CARLE GENERATIONS

I.

RICHARD CARLE, born in England (probably near Dartmouth) in 1600 (?) Emigrated to Boston in 1630 (?). With others went up the coast with Gorgas in 1639, and probably settled near Kittery and died there. Married Rachel

II.

RICHARD CARLE, son of the above, probably born at Kittery 1636 (?). Married Amy, daughter of John and Elizabeth Maine of Maine's point, Casco bay. Owned Carle's point at Kittery (see Stackpole's history of "Old Kittery"), sold it in 1666, sold part of 16 acres on east side of Great cove to his son-in-law, Samuel Knight, in 1684, and other parcels in 1682 and 1693. He and his son-in-law lived at Spinney's cove. He may be the Carle who was selectman of Falmouth (Portland) according to family tradition. Children:

EGBERT

THE EGBERT ORIGIN AND LINE

EGBERT (in Anglo-Saxon "the sword's brightness") is a personal name traceable back to remote English history through the Anglo-Saxon stock on the island and thence even to a Friesian origin on the Continent, on the south shores of the Baltic sea. Egbert, Ebbert, family name. Egbert and Egbers are included in a list of "Friesian Personal and Family Names" in Barber's "British Family Names", p. 33. Also in "Names of Persons in Domesday Book Holding Lands" (Same, p. 43). Also in "Under Tenants of Lands at Domesday Survey", (Same, p. 59). Barber's book, presented to me by Wm. H. Egbert, is in the Fostoria public library. It contains the Carle family name. (See Carle ancestry.) It is difficult to find among the many names listed any other modern survivals. "Applegate" is one. The name EGBERT occurs in English history as follows:

A. D. 664—Egbert, a king of Kent

A. D. 738—Egbert, a king of Northumbria

A. D. 750—Egbert, first archbishop of Canterbury, tomb and inscription in Westminster abbey.

A. D. 800—Egbert, a king of Wessex, went to Holland in exile; befriended by Charlemagne, who aided in his restoration, and in

A. D. 827—became king of all England

A. D. 1041—Egbert, one of the families listed in Domesday book as landholders under Edward the Confessor.

A. D. 1066—Egbert, one of the families listed in Domesday book as under-tenants of William the Conqueror.

It is assumed that the Egberts descended from the above were farmers in England and, becoming Puritans or Pilgrims, migrated with others of that sect to Holland, from whence later came the Puritan migration to America in 1620. A family tradition is that the ancestors of the American Egberts resided at The Hague in Holland. I personally saw there a public gallery where the arms of a Dutch family of the 16th or 17th century was displayed, the name "Egbert" used as a first name of the family.

Dr. Seneca Egbert states that "from what I have been able to learn the two brothers who came to America (see below) came from Brentheim, Hanover, Germany, and I can find no record of their having been in England or having an English ancestry. I do not think there are any Egbert families in Germany or Holland."

"Govert Egbert and his brother, Barent, were probably the first of the name in our direct line to come to this country, arriving here in the vessel, "Spotted Cow" about 1650-53, and Govert was probably our direct ancestor. Barent settled in what is now New York city. Govert was on the list of taxables in Elizabeth, N. J. and was put down as a 'Dutchman'. (Brentheim is just over the Holland border.)

EGBERT GENERATIONS

I.

Govert Egbert and his brother, Barent Egbert, natives of Brentheim, Hanover, Germany, probably of English Puritan origin, sailed from Holland in the "Spotted Cow" and arrived at Staten Island, 1650-53.

II.

Tunis Egbert, son of Govert, resided on Staten island. B. 1695. (See Morris's Memorial History of Staten island, Vol. II., p. 83;1898-1900).

THE EGBERTS IN ENGLAND

The ancient inhabitants of the island were the Brits, or Britons, in England, the Picts in Scotland. The Romans invaded the country in B. C. 55, and withdrew in the fifth century, A. D. The Saxons and Angles defeated these other tribes and named the country Anglia (England). It was divided, by the Saxons, into seven distinct kingdoms, called the Saxon heptarchy, some of which were established in the fifth and others in the sixth century. In the end these were all united in the monarchy of the West Saxons under Egbert.

A. D. 664 Egbert, king of Kent.

A. D. 738. Egbert, king of Northumbria

A. D. 800. Egbert, king of West Saxony (Wessex) afterward sole monarch.

A. D. 827. Egbert, first sole monarch of England.

The first Archbishop of Canterbury was Egbert, whose tomb in Westminster abbey the compiler has visited.

WILLIAMS

Printed pamphlets containing the genealogy of the descendants of John Williams, the first American ancestor, were compiled in 1931; and descendants of Elisha Williams, second son of Jeremiah, were compiled in 1932; by Elisha M. Williams, Jackson, Tenn. Contained in the former book is a chronology of the John H. Williams family compiled by his daughter, Mrs. Laura Batdorf of Fulton county, Ohio, where Elisha Williams first settled (1835-1854). Many of his descendants reside in that county.

I.

John Williams, the American ancestor of this branch of the Williams family, born probably 1714, came from England when a young man, settled in Anne Arundel county, Maryland, and married a widow named Pierce whose maiden name was Elizabeth Cheney. He died before the Revolutionary war. She was born in 1717 and died in Delaware county, Ohio, in 1813, aged 96. They had three sons: John, JEREMIAH, and Isaiah. John married Margaret Cook in 1779. He died in Delaware county, Ohio, April 16, 1814. They were the parents of ten children.

II.

JEREMIAH was born in Anne Arundel county, Md., December 31, 1759. Married Mary Gaither at Annapolis on Dec. 16, 1784. Moved to Huntington county, Pa. about 1787 where Reuben, Elisha, Susannah, and Elizabeth were born. Then to Washington co., Pa., where Mary was born. In 1801 he removed to Fairfield co., Ohio, where Eli and Jeremiah Jr. were born. The family moved to Seneca co., Ohio, Nov. 1821, to a farm in Eden Twp. Then to a farm in Adams twp. in 1832 where he died, August 24, 1842, and is buried in the old Sugar Creek cemetery. He served three years (March 15, 1777-March 15, 1780) as a private soldier in the Revolutionary war, 3d Md. regt.: (Maryland archives, vol. 18, page 176.) He was in the War of 1812 and present at the siege of Fort Meigs. His wife, Mary Gaither, was one of three daughters of Thomas Gaither who came from England and lived 12 miles from Annapolis. Mrs. Gaither died in the summer of 1774. Mary (wife of Jeremiah) was born Nov. 27, 1761 and died Feb. 25, 1845. Isaiah, son of John and Elizabeth: no record.

III.

SUSANNAH Williams, daughter of Jeremiah (senior) was born in Huntington county, Pa. on Dec. 11, 1796, and accompanied her parents to Fairfield co., Ohio, where she was married to Uriah Egbert and with him moved to Seneca county in the spring of 1823, settling first on the North Greenfield road and in 1833 on the Portland road, where she died May 13, 1875, and with her husband is buried in Pleasant Ridge cemetery. The couple were the parents of 13 children, the 12th being Priscilla F. mother of Roscoe Carle. (See Egbert.)

HALE

The Hale (Hales) family is traceable to England and probably extends back to Anglo-Saxon days. Tradition links the family with Sir Mathew Hale in England as an ancestor and with Nathaniel Hale in the American Revolutionary period. The compiler and wife, visiting England in 1910, saw on a sign above a neat public house in Putney, a suburb of London, the name, Randall Hales. Part of the Hales migrated to Ireland during an early period of home rule and when this government was lost, three brothers, including Roger, the ancestor of this branch, migrated to America.

Both buried in Olive Branch cemetery four miles west of Fostoria. Mr. Hales was a hotelkeeper in Fostoria prior to his death, conducting the Laird house, and the Hales hotel. Randle was small of stature, a carpenter by trade, and his wife, born southwest of Baltimore, was large of stature, a famous midwife, a distant relative of President Zachary Taylor and was left considerable wealth by her parents. The couple removed to Jefferson co., Ohio, and then to Hancock Co.

Children: Robert, Joseph, Joel, CHARLES, Isaac, Elizabeth, Sarah.
